Operative - 312.

women detectives and they got a sister a lawyer. They go around very poorly dressed, no one would think that they were detectives. One of them has been running around with the newspaper reporters and has been posing as a reporter for one of the papers."

From the conversation overheard amongst the group of women formerly mentioned, Operative learned that a private detective by the name of McDermott who has an office in New York City, and who lives in the suburbs of New Brunswick, has been working on the case from the start - No one seems to know just what angle he is working. For the passed three weeks McDermott has not been seen.

After remaining about the Phillips Farm for a time, Operative returned to New Brunswick.

While on the way back to New Brunswick, Operative met Mr. Bradley. Mr. Bradley advised Operative that the concensus of opinion was that Mrs. Gibson was lieing, and that she just wants to get in the movies and make some money. Mr. Bradley informed Operative that the Officials have Mrs. Gibson all tuned up so in case the case goes to trial they will have a witness. Mr. Bradley informed Operative that there was several people ready to start something if the Officials tried to implicate Harry Carpender. It is Mr. Bradley's opinion that the whole thing would be dropped.

After remaining about New Brunswick for a time, Operative proceeded to his room at about 10.30 p.m., and they discontinued.
